

THE CODE IN NEW MEXICO.

It was the slickest bit of shooting ever seen in these parts.

KINGSTON, N. M., June 14.—A typical Southwestern duel occurred here a day or two ago between Con Ryan and Jim Burke. The latter has been known for several years as the Terror of the Black Range. He gave himself the title, but as a desperado and in many respects a snaky villain, he had come to be known and feared by many. He and Ryan had had many quarrels, but had not come to blows. On the night preceding the duel they had had more than the ordinary amount of trouble, and it was thought strange by most people that a resort to weapons was not had sooner.

About daylight, when none of the tiger games had closed, Ryan and Burke were on the main street together, when the latter said: "Come, now, let us fight this thing out like men. You and I have carried blowing far enough. Either you'll drop or I will. I'll give you two minutes to draw."

Ryan responded by saying that he was willing to fight, but that he had no gun and that Burke knew it. Burke's reply to this was that Ryan was a liar. "But, come on," he yelled, "and I will get you a gun."

As both men moved off in the direction of Burke's place the crowd followed at a respectful distance, or, as it might be called, at a respectful distance. The crowd followed at a respectful distance, or, as it might be called, at a respectful distance. The crowd followed at a respectful distance, or, as it might be called, at a respectful distance.

At a word from Burke both men sprang forward. The Terror of the Black Range was nifty, swaggering, and defiant, while Ryan was plain, rather unassuming, and a little more of a first, but for some reason did not fire until Burke had sent two bullets whizzing past his head. Ryan was a little more of a first, but for some reason did not fire until Burke had sent two bullets whizzing past his head.

While he was thus surveying the man who confronted him there was a crack and a bullet followed him. Ryan was a little more of a first, but for some reason did not fire until Burke had sent two bullets whizzing past his head.

UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

It is Recommended for Use as Wine for Communion.

Total abstinence agitation has suddenly taken a new direction. The action of several church bodies in condemning the use of unfermented grape juice, instead of alcoholic wine, in the communion service is the first outcome of a determined effort to abolish intoxicants from the communion.

GAME FISH HEREABOUT.

Salmon and Shad in the Hudson and the Bluefish Off the Coast.

During the season just closing about fifty salmon, weighing from 10 to 25 pounds each, have been taken in the Hudson River and New York Bay between Sandy Hook and Albany. This is an unusual catch of this valuable and popular food fish, which, until within a very few years, was an entire stranger to these waters.

Last year less than half that number were taken, and the year before only one or two, which were supposed to be stragglers from other fields. But the noticeable catch of this year, and the distribution of the fish along the coast, are the return crop of the spawn planted a few years ago by the Commission near Glen's Falls.

"Beside the salmon caught in the Hudson," says Fish Commissioner Eugene Blackford, "there have been a number caught along the shores of Long Island, between forty and fifty, and also a number of bluefish, which, until within a very few years, was an entire stranger to these waters."

TRAVELING WITH THEIR GAME.

Smugglers Sneaking Pennsylvania Farmers at Their Own Doors.

HARRISBURG, June 4.—Instead of waiting, in the old way, to pick up in the cities stray victims from the rural districts, a number of Pennsylvania farmers, who have adopted the bold tactic of entering the rural districts themselves and selecting their victims directly from the farms, three of these sharpshooters are now working Pennsylvania counties, and according to the returns thus far received, they have succeeded in pocketing no less than $2,000 in two or three counties within the past two days.

Their method of working is the same in every case. They obtain information as to farmers who have farms to sell, and who can readily furnish them with the following information: John Hummel is a rich farmer, living in Snyder county, across the river from Harrisburg. Last week he received a letter from C. B. Baxter, M. D., who wanted to buy a farm, and who offered him $10,000 for it.

A STRANGE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

Recalled by the Horseless Head Casualty—Its Unfortunate Sequel.

The only railroad accident ever known similar to the one at the Horseless Head, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the other day, "happened on the Erie in 1873 or 1874, and ever since then the regular passengers on that road never occupy a seat on the left-hand side of a car going west, or the right-hand side of a car going east."

THEY SURPRISED MR. MARTIN.

Strange Disappearance of His Collection of Minerals—High Priced Fuel.

A while ago Mr. Joseph Martin, the Siberian explorer, made a journey through an almost unknown region between the Lena and the Amoor rivers. It is a part of the great undeveloped mining district of Siberia. As Martin advanced he made a fine collection of mineralogical specimens, which he put in charge of some of the Tungus natives, who drove the animals. He thought his collection was the best result of his journey, and as he descended the mountain into the Amoor valley, he congratulated himself on having accomplished a very successful tour of exploration.

At this moment of elation he happened to notice that his pack animals seemed to be traveling rather light. He had been so busy with his collection that he had not paid much attention to his caravan. Now, however, he had time to observe that the packages of food had been pretty well exhausted, and he couldn't see that his large collection of minerals took up any noteworthy amount of space. He at once made inquiry.

"Well, you see," the Tungus drivers coolly explained, "we were very busy with the collection of minerals, and we had to leave the food packages behind us. We thought you would be able to find it all again."
